Walker slowly piece-meals the information to the reader as she intricately unveils the characters—"Farida", her love, Ade, and the characters who make up Ade's world. What gives this story its backbone is Walker's incredible use of imagery. The reader practically smells the ocean, sits with "Farida" and Ade as their love grows, and feels "Farida's" anxiety as she grapples with African socio-political conflict unbeknownst to a privileged American.

Ade: A Love Story by Rebecca Walker, Janina Edwards ...

Adé: A Love Story is not the stereotypical love story where boy meets girl and they live happily ever after. Because it is not a formulaic tale, a reader might better appreciate both the story and the characters. This novel may be short in length (at just over 100 pages) but it is definitely not short on style.
