Considering that broadcast grade high speed cameras like the Phantom Flex go for between US$50,000 and $150,000, the idea of a tiny, simple and cheap option like the FPS1000 is actually pretty cool.

FPS1000: The low cost, high speed slow-mo camera

An amateurish question so apologies for that. I want a simple, cheap camera that takes pictures of a high enough resolution to be published. I currently have a 6 megapixel camera and it's just good enough to take photos for books and magazines but only if I hold it very, very still and the photos appear quite small on the page.
